Nearly half of women of color who were working at the beginning of COVID-19 say they’ve felt unsafe at work since the coronavirus crisis began “at least once.”
Safety at Work

Latinx women surveyed were most likely (59 percent) to say they’ve felt unsafe at work.

!Safety at Work Chart

Safety at Home

One in five respondents – men and women – has felt unsafe with their spouse or partner during the coronavirus.

One in three Latinx women say they’ve felt unsafe around their partner / spouse “at least once” since the coronavirus began.

Men are just as likely to say they’ve felt unsafe around their spouse / partner as women.

Communities of color are more likely than white respondents to report feeling unsafe with their partner or spouse.

!Safety at Home Chart

But data suggests the coronavirus hasn’t impacted women’s willingness to report sexual harassment.

!But data suggests the coronavirus hasn’t impacted women’s willingness to report sexual harassment.

To learn more, visit:
timesupfoundation.org/work/safety/unsafe-during-crisis

The TIME’S UP™ Foundation insists upon safe, fair, and dignified work for all by changing culture, companies, and laws.

www.timesupfoundation.org

© 2020 TIME’S UP™ Foundation. The TIME’S UP trademark is the protected property of TIME’S UP Now.