

THE TIME'S UP GUIDE TO

Equity and Inclusion

During COVID-19 Recovery

THIRD EDITION
PUBLISHED OCTOBER 2021

Table of Contents

- 3 Introduction: Navigating an Evolving COVID-19 Recovery
- 5 Building an Anti-Racist Workplace
- 7 INSIGHT: Learn the Definition of Anti-Racism and Build Your Anti-Racist Vocabulary
- 12 Caring for Your People
- 14 INSIGHT: How to Measure the Pay Gap at Your Company
- 15 Equalizing Your Workplace
- 19 INSIGHT: How to Bolster Your Anti-Harassment Policies in This Crisis – and Beyond
- 20 INSIGHT: Key Features of Paid Leave Policies to Enact Now – and Keep Permanently
- 21 Demonstrating Your Leadership
- 23 INSIGHT: How to Leverage Your Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Leaders
- 25 Conclusion: Equity, for Resiliency's Sake

Introduction: Navigating an Evolving COVID-19 Recovery

This third edition of The TIME'S UP Guide to Equity and Inclusion offers strategies for leaders to prioritize diversity, equity, and inclusion through a return to the workplace as the country navigates an evolving COVID-19 recovery. The convergence of compounding crises – the coronavirus pandemic, the devastating economic fallout that has accompanied it, and the long overdue reaction to state-sanctioned, racialized violence – has cast an irrefutable spotlight on social and workplace inequity and demonstrates how systemic sexism and racism show up in all aspects of U.S. society. These crises demand immediate action from organizations across sectors. Leaders must navigate them with compassion and resolve, root out inequities within their organizations, define inclusive values, and set up anti-racist practices that will guide their communities now and moving forward.

Prioritizing diversity, inclusion, and safety within organizations is a moral obligation and a strategic business decision. We must examine what this commitment means for all workplaces – those that have always been in person, those that have been virtual during the pandemic, and those that may be returning to in-person work – and how leaders can ensure that workplaces are more equitable now than they were a year ago. Prior to this period of examination and transformation, the business case for diversity was overwhelming, and now is not the time to lose any ground. More than a year into a national reckoning on race, examining and combating systemic racism at work remains an urgent priority. We believe that the fight to end gender discrimination and systemic racism are all our fight. Both require rigorous self-examination, strong leadership from the top, and a shared commitment to structural change.

Prioritizing diversity, inclusion, and safety within organizations is a moral obligation and a strategic business decision.

As the COVID-19 crisis continues to evolve, creating an equitable “new normal” must be top-of-mind. For many workers, especially women and women of color, a return to “normal” 2019 conditions simply won’t cut it – for some, a return to the workplace could mean a return to a work environment that is not physically, psychologically, or emotionally safe. Other workers have endured long hours and unsafe work conditions in exchange for low wages for far too long. In response, millions of workers are now reevaluating their relationship with work, in what has been dubbed the “The Great Resignation.” Enacting policies to build more equitable workplaces can help attract new workers and retain current ones.

Leaders must avoid assuming that they understand what employees have gone through during the pandemic and that they understand what their employees’ ideal work environment looks like. Instead, leaders should ask employees what they want and need. Learn what employees like – and dislike – about remote and office work and ask employees what they need to be successful in their roles, whether virtual or in person. Recognize that individual workplace experiences, needs, and expectations may differ substantially by race, ethnicity, gender, age, ability, and seniority. Some employees may be concerned about returning to increased harassment, microaggressions, or bias. Some employees may be concerned about balancing caregiving responsibilities, uncertain whether school or care facilities will remain open, or safe, as new variants circulate. While other employees may be scared about their health and safety given evolving company guidelines on vaccinations, masking, and social distancing.

Listen to the unique needs of all employees and create new systems and programs that will benefit everyone, such as on-site child care, flexible schedules, paid leave, and employee assistance programs.

Incorporating an equitable framework into all organizational business decisions will make businesses stronger. Listen to the unique needs of all employees and create new systems and programs that will benefit everyone, such as on-site child care, flexible schedules, paid leave, and employee assistance programs. Evaluate how to include diverse voices in all company decisions to make sure all perspectives are being heard – not just those at the top. Staying invested in building a diverse and inclusive work environment that takes into account the needs of individuals will ensure you retain the best talent, avoid the high cost of turnover, and exhibit the values that clients, customers, and consumers want to see from business. Here are practical actions you can take to build an anti-racist workplace, care for your people, equalize your workplace, and demonstrate your leadership.

Building an Anti-Racist Workplace

Own the fight to end systemic racism at work

As with all organizational imperatives, the fight to end systemic racism needs to be led from the top and be informed by your employees, especially women of color who have been historically and systematically marginalized. But as you undertake this work, recognize that the systemic racism we are now grappling with in our national dialogue is NOT new.

Consider the wider context of this moment amid a pandemic that is disproportionately impacting Black, Latinx, and Indigenous communities. The killing of Black people by state-sanctioned racialized violence. The rise of discrimination and hate crimes against Asian communities. The lack of action in cases of missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls. This is all happening because of institutionalized racism and sexism, which governs how we care for and value people in this country. Now is the time to reflect deeply, examine your own organization, and speak up and show up for your staff.

Do not be silent in this moment

This is a moment in time when leaders everywhere need to speak out. If you are unsure what to say, seek guidance from your Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Lead or outside advocacy groups in developing a message that is authentic to you and your organization.

- ▶ Don't let fear of saying the wrong thing keep you silent. If you say something harmful or hurtful, even unintentionally, immediately issue a genuine apology and reiterate your commitment to combatting racial and gender discrimination.

The fight to end systemic racism needs to be led from the top and be informed by your employees, especially women of color who have been historically and systematically marginalized.

- ▶ Know that silence can feel like violence. Black people across the country are calling on all of us to acknowledge the harm felt by their communities. Saying nothing builds on those acts of violence. Understand that communities of color, LGBTQIA+ employees, and workers with disabilities need harms to be addressed, and institutional silence is complicit in that harm.
- ▶ Be humble about where you're starting from and commit to backing up public statements with action. If you have not done this already, now is the time to add anti-racism to your core values and operationalize those values by evaluating all of your policies and decision-making processes through an anti-racist lens.

Don't just signal support. Root out racism at your workplace.

- ▶ Assess the demographic makeup of your entire staff, at all levels, and up and down the wage scale, looking at factors such as gender, race, ethnicity, disability, LGBTQIA+ status, and more to be able to accurately analyze inequities while being mindful of people's agency in deciding which identities they feel comfortable disclosing.
- ▶ Establish clear goals tied to becoming an anti-racist workplace and attach owners and success metrics to them so that you can track your organization's journey over time.
- ▶ Apply an intersectional analysis as you seek to understand and improve the experience of your staff. Recognize the overlapping and interdependent systems of discrimination some of them may face because of their race, gender, sexuality, gender identity, ability, and other critical forms of identity, and center their experiences in this work. Analyze the effects that your actions have on LGBTQIA+ employees, people with disabilities, older workers, and people with caregiving responsibilities — and then work to develop more inclusive policies.
- ▶ Investigate the effects of your external actions on Black people and people of color, particularly women. Consider bringing in outside expertise to evaluate the impact of your organization. How do the products you produce or the policies you lobby for impact Black communities? What can you do through your business to support Black women? The work that your organization does externally is directly connected to your internal culture. It can either build credibility and trust or undermine your stated values.
- ▶ Devote resources toward efforts that actually enhance the lives of Black communities and communities of color. Invest in structural changes that will genuinely benefit communities of color. For example, you can commit to a strategic planning process that centers on anti-racism; hire facilitators that specialize in racial equity and racial healing; or design long-term programs to develop and retain your talent. Set significant resources aside for training that effectively teaches people of all races and genders how to combat racist behavior, including unconscious bias and microaggressions.

INSIGHT

Learn the Definition of Anti-Racism and Build Your Anti-Racist Vocabulary

Start by grounding yourself in this work and examining your own privilege. Here are some key terms to learn as you delve deeper into these issues:

- ▶ Systemic Racism: Systemic racism is the complex interaction of culture, policy, and institutions that contribute to false hierarchies of human value.
- ▶ Anti-Racism, as described by Ibram X. Kendi, is a transformative concept that reorients and reenergizes the conversation about racism – and, even more fundamentally, points us toward liberating new ways of thinking about ourselves and each other. Anti-racism is defined as the work of actively opposing discrimination based on race by advocating for changes in political, economic, and social life. Anti-racism tends to be an individualized approach, which is set up to counter an individual's racist behaviors and impact.
- ▶ White Supremacy: The idea that white people and the ideas, thoughts, beliefs, and actions of white people are superior to people of color and their ideas, thoughts, beliefs, and actions. While most people associate white supremacy with extremist groups like the Ku Klux Klan and neo-Nazis, white supremacy is ever present in our institutional and cultural assumptions that assign value, morality, goodness, and humanity to the white group – while casting people and communities of color as worthless, immoral, bad, inhuman, and undeserving.
- ▶ Intersectionality, as coined by Kimberlé Crenshaw, is a framework for understanding how different aspects of a person's social and political identities (e.g., gender, race, class, sexuality, ability, physical appearance) combine to create unique modes of discrimination and privilege. Intersectionality identifies advantages and disadvantages that are felt by people due to this combination of factors.
- ▶ Implicit biases: Implicit biases are negative associations that people unknowingly hold. They are expressed automatically and without conscious awareness. Many studies have indicated that implicit biases affect individuals' attitudes and actions, thus creating real-world implications, even though individuals may not even be aware that those biases exist within themselves. For example, media representations of Black men can lead to negative implicit bias, which can lead to conscious feelings of lack of safety or other negative character traits that could lead to denying a job to a qualified Black man.

Hold conversations to bring awareness to racism at work and create genuinely safe spaces where people can share their experiences openly

- ▶ Hold several spaces for your Black employees and employees of color to gather and respect their boundaries and wellbeing. This includes creating, funding, and prioritizing Employee Resource Groups (ERGs) for Black, Latinx, Asian, Indigenous, and other communities and making time and space, either virtually or in real life, for ERGs to gather, support one another, and raise issues, such as toxic workplace culture, fears of retaliation, and other barriers that prevent clear pathways to career growth and promotions. Recognize and support staff who hold multiple identities and may want to engage with more than one group. And while these should be safe spaces for employees of color, communicate that there are channels – including anonymous ones – to address and correct issues raised by ERGs.
- ▶ Lead with empathy. This is likely an exhausting and emotionally trying time for your Black staff. Ensure that they understand paid time off is an available option and that work can be reallocated in the interim. Respect the response you receive and make the offer again at a later time without an expiration date. This is not a time to add additional responsibilities or offload emotional labor onto your Black staff, particularly Black women who may be experiencing additional caregiving responsibilities at home. Encourage managers to ask their Black team members how they want to be supported and to honor whatever they may need, especially if you don't fully relate to their healing process.
- ▶ Create opportunities for all staff to come together as a group. In addition to holding spaces for your staff of color to gather, bring your entire staff together to share what they are thinking and feeling, to answer questions or concerns, and to discuss how your organization should evolve to meet the essential demands of this moment. Recognize that every staff member is starting from a different place and that their proximity to and understanding of systemic racism will vary widely. Be prepared to meet each person where they are without tolerating sexist or racist views and navigate these complexities by investing in experts and trained facilitators with cautiousness and understanding of these nuances. Some of your staff are already consumed by racial injustice while others are only just coming to terms with it. Ensure these spaces do not create additional trauma for your staff of color and that Black, Indigenous, and people of color (BIPOC) do not bear the burden of explaining systemic racism to white staff. Amidst continued uncertainty around return-to-office plans, make sure these spaces are accessible to all of your employees – regardless of if they are working in the office or at home.

Lead the way on anti-racist efforts while learning from your BIPOC colleagues

- ▶ Like other key priorities, anti-racism efforts should be led from the top, by the leadership team. It is incumbent to educate yourselves independently, as this is self-guided work that you must approach before leading your teams [See Demonstrating Your Leadership, pg 21]. Be humble about what you don't know and reach out for advice. Do the work by studying how white supremacy, racial violence, and systemic racism have shaped, and continue to shape, American society. These issues are complex and pervasive. Consider how they shape your workplace and the lives of your employees.
- ▶ Give voice to BIPOC leadership, colleagues, or employees, but do not lean on them to address these issues; you must own this work. Involve Black staff and other staff of color in these efforts but don't expect them to do the work. Too often, Black staff and staff of color are called upon to help organizations navigate issues regarding race, only to end up shouldering burdens that are not theirs to carry. It is not right or fair to rely on your staff of color to tackle these issues; you must take the lead yourself.
- ▶ If you're only asking for staff of color to weigh in on issues of race, that's an issue. Give staff of color the option to contribute to your anti-racism work from the expertise of their lived experience and cultural sensitivity, but do not make assumptions about their time, emotional capacity, or interest in contributing. Give them credit, ask for their input, and run decisions by them, but be careful not to tokenize them. This can often happen when a trauma occurs that impacts members of a particular community, such as Black staff being asked to discuss police violence, Asian staff being asked to speak about Asian Hate, or Indigenous staff being asked to talk about colonization efforts.
- ▶ Encourage and empower everyone to speak out against racist workplace practices and adopt a zero-tolerance policy for this behavior. Set up systems that enable and empower your employees to come forward if they confront racist, unsafe, or illegal practices at work. These should cover a range of behaviors, from the most egregious acts to microaggressions that deprive your staff of the dignity they deserve at work. All of your employees, particularly women of color, must feel comfortable shining a light on workplace practices that jeopardize their safety or undermine their dignity.
- ▶ Make sure you have a whistleblower policy in place that promotes a culture of transparency and accountability and gives staff a concrete way to share their concerns. If you already have a whistleblower policy in place, review it and make sure it meets this moment. If not, work with your legal team to enact one that encourages your staff to unearth problems early and protects them from retaliation. Work with experts and facilitators to outline a clear process that facilitates learning, growth, and correction when incidents arise. Continue to check in with your staff about the processes that are created or revised. In a quickly evolving world, processes may need to be reevaluated or refreshed regularly.

Move into action swiftly to examine and dismantle racist and sexist practices embedded in all business functions

- ▶ Evaluate the many ways racism shows up in the workplace and how racism harms staff and erodes company culture. A lack of diverse representation at your organization may indicate racism or sexism within your recruiting and hiring practices. And language used in performance evaluations may reveal internal biases that impact pay and promotions.
- ▶ Remove racism from your recruiting, hiring, and talent management processes and increase BIPOC representation across all levels and departments. If you have paused new hires or are moving more slowly to fill positions, take the time to look for and build a more diverse pool of candidates. Remember that people are inherently biased toward those similar to themselves; however, if we are aware of implicit biases, we can work to combat them and cultivate more inclusive workplaces. And if you are in an industry that is growing and hiring, stay vigilant about protocols that promote the consideration of BIPOC and women candidates, even when you need to staff up quickly. Below are some practical tips for diversifying your talent pool and advancing your BIPOC staff:
 - ▶ Focus your talent pipeline: Recruit candidates from historically Black colleges and universities (HBCUs) and minority-serving institutions (MSIs). When recruiting at predominantly white institutions, seek out organizations that represent Black students and other students of color. Build relationships with networks that represent BIPOC emerging leaders. Place job openings on websites likely to reach talent of color and use inclusive language in the postings. Work with your local high schools and community college systems. Focus on skills, rather than credentials, which can artificially shrink your pool of candidates.
 - ▶ Commit to diversity internships, fellowships, and secondment programs and commit a percentage of your internship hires to BIPOC. Consider how to support HBCUs and MSIs outside of recruiting. This could include investing in scholarships or offering financial support to these institutions in other ways. To reduce internship inequities, pay interns and provide housing stipends so that students from all financial backgrounds can access these opportunities.
 - ▶ Overhaul your talent processes to remove racist practices. Conduct a thorough examination of your interview process, your performance management practices, your compensation structures, and your retention and promotion policies. How are these processes failing your Black staff? What additional mentorship and sponsorship can you offer your talent of color to ensure that they are supported at each stage of their career and have the opportunity to reach their fullest potential within your organization?

- ▶ Examine your company policies related to dress code, including hairstyles and other matters related to appearance to ensure they are not barriers to BIPOC professional and socio-economic advancement. Know that perceptions about what is deemed appropriate are rooted in white supremacy. Learn about how respectability politics has impacted the Black community.

Position the fight to end systemic racism as an ongoing effort that you are committed to in the long run

Becoming an anti-racist organization is not a static achievement; it is lifelong work that you and your colleagues must commit to each and every day. Make sure that the goals you set are understood, measurable, and embodied by everyone, and that every member of your team knows what role they play in achieving these goals. Remind everyone that you are building an essential muscle that will grow stronger with effort and time. There is no shortcut to this work; the only way forward is through.

As the author of So You Want to Talk About Race, Ijeoma Oluo says, "You don't need to be free of racism to be an anti-racist. Anti-racism is the commitment to fight racism wherever you find it, including in yourself. And it's the only way forward."

Becoming an anti-racist organization is not a static achievement; it is lifelong work that you and your colleagues must commit to each and every day.

Caring for Your People

Factor in diversity when making furlough, lay off, hiring, and return-to-work decisions

Maybe you were making great progress in diversifying your workforce before these crises or maybe that was a commitment you were just embarking on. Either way, a diverse workforce is critical to your business. Given the ebb and flow of restrictions as the COVID-19 pandemic evolves, you may find yourself continually evaluating whether to grow or shrink your workforce. As you confront decisions around layoffs, furloughs, who to bring back to work, or who to hire, you can prioritize diversity by:

- ▶ Paying attention to the impact those decisions may have on the diversity of your workforce and including this factor in your decision-making;
- ▶ Thinking about who is in the room when you're making critical decisions; and
- ▶ Organizing a task force that includes a cross-section of employees at all levels to advocate for and represent the people you employ.

As you consider who to hire or lay off, consider how to make your workforce more diverse. Examine "neutral" criteria like tenure as a basis for deciding who to furlough or lay off to make sure it does not have an unintended, disproportionate effect. It is often the case that new hires are disproportionately women or people of color – especially if you were intentionally diversifying your workforce prior to these crises – so using a "neutral" criteria like tenure could unintentionally eradicate your diversity gains.

As you hire, take the time to look for and build a diverse pool of candidates. And if you are in an industry that is growing and hiring, stay vigilant about protocols that promote the consideration of women and people of color, even when you need to staff up quickly.

COVID-19 has forced millions of qualified people – especially communities of color – out of work due to layoffs and increased caregiving responsibilities, among other reasons, so don't assume that an applicant who is unemployed doesn't have what it takes to get the job done. Instead, look at their recent employment history to assess their credentials.

Implement other cost-cutting measures before laying people off

If the latest COVID-19 guidelines and restrictions have you reconsidering layoffs, first consider reducing executive pay, enacting a hiring freeze, pausing bonuses, and pursuing other cost-cutting measures that could save jobs. This would enable you to retain your diverse workforce and capitalize on their skills, knowledge of your business, and productivity to get through these crises. Or you can turn to job sharing arrangements that retain employees while lowering costs. If you do enact pay cuts, start with the highest earners and do what you can to avoid reducing pay for your lower-paid employees who likely have fewer financial resources to fall back on. Your staff will appreciate you going the extra mile for them, and will respond in kind.

Reimagine roles in order to retain staff

Major multinational corporations in retail, finance, tech, and telecommunications are taking action on reskilling — not with small pilots, but rather with comprehensive plans to retrain large segments of their workforces. These programs signal that the “future of work” is no longer on the distant horizon.

Your staff will appreciate you going the extra mile for them, and will respond in kind.

Even if you are not making those large shifts, your business priorities may still evolve to meet this moment, and you may find that employees’ current roles and responsibilities must shift too. Rather than furlough or lay off your people, you can retain them and reimagine their roles so they match your current business needs by:

- ▶ Training your employees on new skills and offering them opportunities that you might not otherwise;
- ▶ Stretching more junior employees and giving them the chance to grow in their roles and showcase different skills; and
- ▶ Analyzing the salaries of those remaining in their jobs and taking on more work, making sure their compensation is still fair and not discriminatory.

As you make these shifts, constantly evaluate how these decisions may disproportionately impact the diversity of your workforce. Is one work unit fully occupied while another is languishing? Are there individuals who are being left out as work is reallocated?

Rethink the timing of your performance management process

Even in good times, performance reviews can be stressful and anxiety-producing. Recognize the pressures on your staff right now and delay performance reviews if you can.

When you are ready to conduct performance reviews:

- ▶ Consider how the work employees are doing may differ from their “usual” assignments. Take this into account in your reviews at all levels.
- ▶ Be aware of how this unprecedented work environment may have limited your employees’ ability to perform or deliver results when considering pay increases or promotions. Women, caregivers, and other vulnerable employees can be particularly disadvantaged by unintended consequences or assumptions about their work performance. For example, employees with kids at home may be viewed as less committed to their work right now, when the reality is that they’re spending more hours online than ever before.
- ▶ Conduct a pay equity assessment – and make sure any adjustments in pay and compensation do not disadvantage women, people of color, or other employees who are historically underpaid and undervalued.

Prioritize diversity when hiring contractors and vendors

Permanent staff are not the only way to create a diverse workplace. Your company’s purchasing power can help strengthen the diversity of your contractors and vendors. You can show your commitment to diversity by expanding purchasing or investments in small, BIPOC, or women-owned businesses or by prioritizing investments in communities hard-hit by these crises. Consumers, customers, and clients are looking for businesses that are stepping up during this challenging time, so it could give you a competitive advantage.

INSIGHT

How to Measure the Pay Gap at Your Company

Ensuring that your people are paid equitably is as important today as ever. There are a number of steps employers can take to improve pay equity, such as pay transparency and standardized salary bands. When assessing pay equity at your company across lines of difference – gender, race, ability, and more – it’s important to analyze the median pay (including bonuses when applicable), not look simply at “equal pay for equal work,” which can hide disparities due to promotions and occupational segregation.

For a median gender pay gap analysis, for example, you would look at the median pay of women working full time versus men working full time. Median pay is an unadjusted raw measure used by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development to assess not only equal pay but equal opportunity by factoring in how many women serve in high-ranking roles.

Equalizing Your Workplace

Abide by the latest COVID-19 guidelines – but don't isolate staff

Most companies are rethinking how to resume operations under new conditions, evaluating vaccination requirements, mask mandates, social distancing recommendations, and staff capacity limitations. As you implement safety measures, make sure that they don't unintentionally roll back your work culture or exclude women, people of color, LGBTQIA+, people with disabilities, older workers, people with caregiving responsibilities, and other vulnerable employees from career advancement. If you must reconfigure your workplace to meet social distancing guidance, consider how your actions may have a disproportionate effect on some of your people by:

- ▶ Being aware of which employees are moved out of "better" spaces – further from amenities, less visible to clients, off the senior management floor, or away from key leadership and collaborators;
- ▶ Recognizing any power imbalances between those working from home and in the office. Hybrid workspaces can cause new kinds of communication challenges, so you must remain vigilant that all voices are heard equally; and
- ▶ Committing to include a diverse group when you convene people and making sure women and other vulnerable employees are not unintentionally excluded if meetings or events are limited in size.

Seize opportunities to promote inclusive workspaces

Empty, or nearly empty, workplaces can provide the opportunity to promote diversity and inclusion in the long run. Take advantage of this moment to make renovations, such as accommodations to enhance accessibility for disabled employees, converting gendered bathrooms into inclusive spaces, designating private spaces for praying or lactating, and displaying signage that is more welcoming and inclusive.

Offer flexible work schedules and working conditions to meet your people's needs

Working from home during this crisis has given many companies direct experience in how their business can still function with staff not occupying the same physical space. Allowing that arrangement to continue as workplaces reopen can help you retain your employees and make them more productive. If your employees continued to work from home or you leveraged flexible scheduling in recent months, don't abandon these tools. Alternative work arrangements can make it easier for employees to balance the sustained demands of home and work during the COVID-19 pandemic, and can even increase productivity as they are able to focus on completing tasks at a time that works best for them. This may be especially important for people with caregiving responsibilities – disproportionately women. For example, child care, school schedules, and social distancing recommendations for unvaccinated children continue to evolve.

Keep in mind that some employees may not feel comfortable coming back to work right away due to health concerns for themselves or their family. Allowing employees to work remotely – if possible – is one way a company can show concern for its workforce while also avoiding questions about private health information. If possible, consider giving people the option to return to the office. Introverts and extroverts on your team may have very different needs, and giving staff the option to choose the work environment that works best for them could increase employee satisfaction and maximize productivity. Instead of implementing a one-size-fits-all approach, send out a survey to learn who wants to come back to the office and when so you can plan ahead in a way that meets your company's and your employees' various needs.

Flexible scheduling allows people who cannot work from home the ability to adjust their schedules so they can tend to caretaking or other demands at home. Flexible scheduling can work for large and small companies and benefit salaried and hourly workers alike. If you lead a large company, set up systems that allow your staff to select shifts. If you lead a small business, work with your employees to come up with creative ways to adjust their work schedules to meet everyone's needs, such as allowing your team to work with each other to cover shifts.

As important as it is to allow flexible workplace schedules, as a manager, you must also be vigilant of unwanted changes in workplace culture. You may start to notice those who stay home feel excluded from those who return to the office. Some research also suggests that letting employees choose what days they want to work from home could cause unintentional impacts to diversity. For example, employees with children, particularly women, are more likely to want to remain working from home full time; staying at home while others are in the office can be detrimental to one's career.

Finally, bear in mind that whatever scheduling system you use, you should provide your employees with notice, agency, and predictability in their work schedule – given the demands people are juggling at home, planning around a predictable work schedule is more important than ever.

Supply your teams with the tools they need to work at home effectively

Working from home is not created equal for everyone. Pay attention to any inequities in resources or technology that may make working from home more challenging for some. Perhaps they do not have high-speed internet access or must share one computer in the house with another working partner or children completing schoolwork from home.

Because employees may not volunteer these challenges on their own, employers should take the initiative to raise these issues up front with the entire workforce and work with employees individually to create tailored solutions. It's equally important to make sure video conferencing policies and practices are accessible for people with hearing impairments; use closed captioning and live transcriptions as much as possible.

Working from home is not created equal for everyone.

Manage microaggressions in virtual and in-person contexts

When hosting virtual meetings, emailing, messaging, conducting one-to-one check-ins, or engaging with staff in person, watch out for microaggressions. A microaggression "is a subtle way of showing one's bias and discriminating tendencies. Any statement, joke, or inappropriate inquiry alluding to someone's gender, race, or age can be a sign of a microaggression, especially if it's said in the context of one's weakness." These are the frequent, often overlooked, behaviors that cause so many people, including women, Black workers, and other people of color, to feel excluded at work.

Microaggressions can happen anywhere, and remote work is no exception. In remote meetings, as in real life, microaggressions can include talking over or cutting off women, junior level team members, and people of color; not giving time to introverted thinkers; or soliciting input from some team members more than others.

To combat microaggressions, think expansively about who should be invited to virtual meetings and pay attention to who may not be speaking – or who's getting interrupted or talked over during those conversations. You can correct those behaviors in the moment by calling on people who have been ignored or going back to points they raised earlier.

Microaggressions can also take place between individuals, such as inappropriate jokes or comments. Remote communications channels (emails, text, chat) may make it easier for aggressors to take license and harder for leaders to spot, so extra effort may be needed.

You can help root out microaggressions from your workplace by:

- ▶ Educating yourself about the many ways microaggressions show up in the workplace, acknowledging they exist, and recognizing how they can harm individuals and erode your company culture;

- ▶ Holding conversations to bring awareness to the issue and create safe spaces where people can share their experiences openly; and
- ▶ Adopting a zero tolerance policy for this behavior. If you notice microaggressions happening in your workplace, address them immediately.

Acknowledge the added responsibilities that caregivers have at home and co-create custom solutions to support their success

The pandemic has highlighted a struggle that many employees, especially working women, have confronted for years – the “second shift” of unpaid work that awaits them at home, where there may be children, ailing relatives, or older parents who need care and support. The challenges caregivers face are worsening as workplaces open – even as many school, after-school program, and child care center schedules remain uncertain.

Recognize caregivers' additional responsibilities and work with employees to help them balance these competing demands. This can take the form of alternative work arrangements or informal arrangements that allow a worker to go home early or come in late on occasion.

Don't make assumptions about people's availability. For example, you may hold a 6 p.m. meeting online to support employees who remain remote without considering how that decision prevents parents from preparing their children's dinner on time. Conversely, don't assume that an employee cannot make a late-evening meeting because they have children at home. Allow your people to freely express their challenges without fear of disapproval or prejudice, and work with them to co-create custom solutions.

Watch out for workplace harassment and take action when it happens

It remains critical to prevent and address workplace harassment by confronting it head-on, no matter where employees are working – whether they are at home or in the office. As employees may return to the office with higher stress levels, anxieties, fears, and uncertainty, be aware that incidents of sexual harassment, discrimination, and/or bullying could increase. Know that harassment isn't confined to physical workplaces, and that many virtual communication tools are not well set up for tracking and reporting harassment.

There's also evidence that quarantine and other stay-at-home measures may put individuals at increased risk in their own homes. Employers can help by providing survivors of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking with information about emergency resources, access to the employee assistance program service, and the ability to use their sick leave as safe days to get the services and assistance they need. Assure employees that if they or someone they know are living in an unsafe or violent home environment, they are not alone. Remind them that there are resources available to them, such as the National Domestic Violence Hotline, which is open 24/7 and is both confidential and free. Seek out those resources yourself, so you can learn how to support a colleague who is being abused by an intimate partner.

Offer permanent paid sick days and paid family and medical leave

The COVID-19 crisis has illustrated the importance of building in paid sick days and paid family and medical leave for all workers as a regular part of your business plan. In this period of tremendous economic difficulty, these policies are critical – and must be made permanent to keep your staff safe and supported over the long term.

Paid leave improves worker retention and increases worker productivity, and companies that implement this policy report that the rewards outweigh the costs. By investing in your workforce, you can retain your trained and committed employees and emerge stronger and ready to move forward as our economy comes back.

Additionally, provide bereavement leave and be flexible about timing. The pandemic has interfered with the ability for families to gather and grieve the loss of loved ones. Staff may need time off to grieve a loved one who died months ago, and it's important to allow them time to do so.

INSIGHT

How to Bolster Your Anti-Harassment Policies During Crisis – and Beyond

- ▶ Maintain strong reporting systems through multiple channels to ensure that survivors have clear ways to report sexual harassment, even under virtual or short-staffed conditions, and are protected from retaliation.
- ▶ Have a policy that encourages bystanders to speak up for their fellow employees, without fear of retaliation.
- ▶ Address complaints in a timely manner and investigate them through remote processes, if necessary. Create clear protocols for phone and video interviews and hold frequent status updates with your investigative teams to stay on top of the cases they are handling. Keep complainants informed throughout the process.
- ▶ Extend corporate sexual harassment policies to all your people – including independent contractors and interns – to ensure that everyone you employ works in an environment free from harassment and discrimination.
- ▶ Provide effective sexual harassment training, tailored to your business, to your entire staff. Make sure it addresses the risks of sexual harassment in remote, virtual, in-office, or understaffed working conditions. Consider refreshing or recirculating information about sexual harassment in the context of this moment, with a focus on the additional burdens often experienced by women of color.

Demonstrating Your Leadership

Lead with empathy, transparency, and understanding

While some aspects of the pandemic have been shared experiences during these crises, individuals have faced the effects of the pandemic, the subsequent economic fallout, and state-sanctioned racialized violence in many different ways. Some have been fortunate enough to escape illness and economic devastation but have struggled to homeschool their children and care for elderly parents while keeping up with work. Others have been directly affected by illness or have had loved ones lose jobs and economic stability. Some communities have been hit particularly hard: communities of color are collectively reeling from the disproportionate loss of hours, jobs, and lives due to the pandemic.

On top of this, many are experiencing outrage, pain, and injustice in response to the killings of Daunte Wright, Adam Toledo, George Floyd, Breonna Taylor, Ahmaud Arbery, Alton Sterling, Eric Garner, Sandra Bland, Laquan McDonald, and so many others whose names we may never know. Do not overlook how painful these acute experiences are for your staff, or how company and leadership reaction – or inaction – to these events may have contributed to or amplified trauma.

Empathetic leadership is especially called for now, and for the foreseeable future. Leaders must recognize that these discrete, but interrelated crises impact each of their employees differently – but significantly. Here are some steps you can take to lead with empathy:

- ▶ Understand that every employee is grappling with distinct challenges during this time, rather than make assumptions about what they are going through.
- ▶ Recognize that the needs of your staff will evolve as these crises evolve and commit to meeting their needs as best you can.
- ▶ Be transparent about the business decisions you must make and why. Take urgent steps toward transparency by publishing workforce diversity data and make concrete commitments that can be measured over time.
- ▶ Show solidarity with your people, especially those on the front lines.

- ▶ Acknowledge and seek to understand the ways employees up and down the wage scale are experiencing these crises.
- ▶ Make mental health support widely available to all staff, and make sure any employee assistance program or other providers your company uses have clinical expertise and training in dealing with a diverse set of clients.
- ▶ Ensure that your managers are informed, trained, and aware of the issues that the staff they supervise may be facing, and give your managers the support they need to show up for your staff.
- ▶ Look first for opportunities to add Black leadership and leadership of color to your board of directors and leadership team and know that a lone voice is not enough.

Communicate constantly and transparently about all aspects of your business, including company benefits and policies

At times of great change and uncertainty, strong communication is key. Communicate frequently, utilizing all the modes and channels available to you, and with as much transparency as possible. In the absence of information, employees may not understand the decisions management is making or the scope of their rights and responsibilities.

- ▶ Ensure that your company policies are transparent and easily accessible to all your people – as well as any adjustments made to meet the demands of this moment. Make it clear in all your communications that employees can take advantage of these programs and resources without fear of repercussion or retaliation.
- ▶ Continue to host company-wide meetings and virtual town halls to level the information and communication playing field so all employees return to the office or continue to work remotely on equal footing.
- ▶ When you build these new communication channels, keep the ones that are working permanent – and expand on them. Being intentional in your ongoing communications is key to building inclusive and equitable workplaces.

Keep diversity and inclusion integral to your economic recovery strategy

Your commitment to diversity and inclusion, and to affinity or Employee Resource Groups (ERGs), has never been more important. Your diversity and inclusion leaders have the expertise and the vision to guide you through these uncertain times, to facilitate important input from your people, and to imagine new and innovative approaches to these new working conditions. At the same time, your

*At times of great change and uncertainty, strong communication is key.

GLMUVLVG LEXLRO OHDGHV\ EHRSHUDVVRUQHG VRV DERWRZ W PDNH
VMHW BXDO VNLOVVG NQDHGJ EDVHLVPDLLEG

$ RX UHVWVH BUN RQLGHU DV RSSRUWV HPSORNHVPLV ORVIRVROLOVH
EZ EURVDEV RU HPSOHLVDA EHUGHURUM SHRSORRQV RMURIHH
VQGRZ DROOHDV RUEKOGUDSSRUW DVSRORURUPHBU 6REDOGLVDED DG RAV
SDQHPLF SURROVPA\ SUHMVSHRSOHRPDLQ PHDDQ DFVV W VHORUOHGDHUV
DG RE DMU BV IRUVH ORVSSRUWVH E\ UHDLQ RM GLMUVLVROHV
HQLQ IQLO IRU$V GLMUVLVSURWDPVDG LQVWV DG SURVW GLMUVH
WQHSLSHOLAV

Set a tone of strong and visible leadership from the top

BWWLVKWRQDG FQWHRX DV IRUM EXLEVV DQV VWDUWVKWRS7KMLV
HVSHFLDQVZ KHQ RM VWDVQOEHORRNLOVRX IRUGLUHFVQDQ KHUWDLQVPHV
ORGHOWKUNSDOFISUDFWLFRV HSHFVRM HPSORNHWRRORZRU HPSOHLIRX DUH
HERMDLQ SHRSORRQV IURP KRPH PDNHVMHX DG RWKHQHDGHVURVWKHRPSDQ
DUHWRR2SHQ\ GLVFYVERWVKHXLVV DG SHUVRQKDOOHQWKDVK DUHUNLQ
WRYHUFRPHQ UHPHEHUVFRPPQFDWH RIWHQERVWKYDOMWVKDQVNHWRM
EXLEVV LEQLQ GLYHUVWVWQDG LEXLRO

Measure the effects on workforce diversity as you make critical business decisions

RPSDCHV PXW FROVEXQ\ WUDFVKQV WKHVFLVHVDUHDIIHFWLVKHMWDIDQ
PHDVMHWKHPSDFWKDFULWLEQOVV GHFLVLRQDUHKDYLRQWKIRYHUDQYHUVIRWVKHLU
BUNIRUFHRM FOLHVFWRPHUVDG LQHVWRUQDQ WRBZ WKLVBUPDWLROVZOO
SURVSHFWLHPSORNHV

INSIGHT

How to Leverage Your Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Leaders

:KHQ RE PDVV PHGLDQ HWHUWDLQHRPSDQ FUHDWQ,' WDVNIRUEUHVSRQVWRVKHULVLWKHWRRNVUDVHSHVHOMH WKWRS
BQ SURYLGLYHUVSHVFWLQVWVKHSHRSOSURWDPV DG SROLF\
,QDGLLWLVQVWLVQVHORUOHGDHUVKHNQVHQLRQOVURKW LQGLYHUVLVW
DG LEXLROOHGDHUVKHDGRI $V DG UHSUHVHVDWLVYRQDOOHYHOV
7KLVQ\ GHVLQ WDVNIRUFUHVQVHQLQHDWHUHQHLDRI LEXLROZWK
HPSORNHVHRSRUWVQVWVKHHOWKHEHGV BUIH EHLQKHDUG
DG RQLGHUHGE\ W HFWV WDP

In the immediate term, make sure to track the impact of staffing decisions on your workforce diversity, equity, and inclusion metrics so you can assess how your choices impact your company's makeup. Collecting data in the near term will help you determine if you are falling behind on your workforce diversity goals or staying on track – and enable you to devise a plan to meet or exceed them over the long term.

The metrics each company keeps tabs on will differ, but you should be sure to measure:

- ▶ The demographics of your entire workforce – as you make reductions or furloughs, promote or consolidate, and as you hire;
- ▶ The salaries and total compensation of all your employees, so you can conduct a gender and racial pay gap analysis; and
- ▶ How and to whom you distribute key assignments, opportunities, and workloads as you reallocate work.

Tracking and strengthening workforce diversity is essential to your long-term success

Companies that track the impact of these crises on their staff and take steps to improve the economic stability of their employees are likely to see improved productivity and greater customer satisfaction. Tracking and strengthening workforce diversity is essential to your long-term success, so figure out how to measure it now to ensure you have the systems set up for the future.

Now is the time to double down on your values

How you live up to your values now will have future implications on hiring the best talent, attracting discerning customers, and building your business's resilience over the long haul. Before the pandemic, company leaders were already realizing how their workplace culture and values impacted their bottom line, as more and more workers and consumers make decisions on where to work and purchase goods and services based on how businesses live up to their stated values of community and inclusion. Demonstrating a commitment to your values when times are tough will be noticed and rewarded by consumers who will return more quickly – and with greater loyalty than before.

Conclusion: Equity, for Resiliency's Sake

TIME'S UP insists upon a world where work is safe, fair, and dignified for all – something that is only possible with the leadership and partnership of the business community. Prior to these crises, companies were making historic progress on diversity, equity, and inclusion and publicly committing to serve all stakeholders, not just shareholders. This work must continue with fresh resolve today.

We can no longer ignore the impact of this economic crisis, health crisis, and racial inequity crisis on women, particularly women of color and women in low-wage jobs:

- ▶ COVID-19 has disproportionately impacted Black, Latino, and Indigenous communities. Hospitalizations and deaths are disproportionately high because the health care and support these communities have needed have been underfunded and ignored. As of August 2021, when adjusting for age, non-Hispanic Black individuals were 2.8 times more likely than non-Hispanic white individuals to be hospitalized and 2 times more likely to die due to COVID-19. Similar patterns hold for Hispanic or Latino individuals (2.8 times and 2.3 times respectively), and non-Hispanic American Indian or Alaska natives (3.5 times and 2.4 times). In addition, Black and Latino households were more likely than white and Asian households to report hardships such as lack of food or difficulty covering usual expenses during the pandemic.
- ▶ Black and Latinx women have disproportionately suffered job losses, which have been concentrated in the hard-hit service, hospitality, and retail sectors. As of August 2021, there were almost 3 million women who had lost jobs since February 2020 and had not found new employment. And women of color continue to be left behind in recovery efforts: Unemployment rates among Black women (7.9%), Latinas (6%), and Asian women (4.2%) remain significantly higher than pre-pandemic rates.
- ▶ Many women are also bearing the burden at home. Those who are fortunate enough to work are balancing school, child care, and caring for elderly or sick relatives. Before the pandemic hit, six in ten unpaid caregivers were female, and caregiving prevalence was higher for Hispanic (21%), Black (20.3%), and Asian individuals (19.7%) than white individuals (16.9%). This disparity has only been exacerbated by the pandemic, as the vast majority of family caregivers have seen their caregiving responsibilities increase significantly. In one survey, 57% of Black caregivers felt they couldn't afford to get sick because no one else could provide care for their loved one; 49% say the pandemic has impacted their financial ability to provide care; and 73% wish they had more help with their caregiving duties because of the increased stress of the pandemic.

At TIME'S UP Foundation, our focus has always been on combating sexual harassment and building safe, fair, and dignified workplaces for everyone. However, the patriarchal system from which sexual harassment flows is intimately bound up in the racism and racial hierarchy that has governed the United States for centuries. And you can't solve the problem of sexual harassment without an anti-racist approach to this work.

The recommendations covered in this third edition of the guide are intended to offer initial guidance in the short term. Fostering and maintaining an anti-racist, anti-sexist workplace culture will take a sustained effort over time, but it's worth the time and investment. Because if our entire workforce is stronger, then our businesses and the entire economy will be more competitive, more resilient, and more prosperous in the long run.

We welcome all business leaders to join our community as we spearhead innovations in how we work — and develop a more inclusive, just, and resilient system for the future. Learn more by visiting us at timesupfoundation.org, and please contact us with your feedback.

Acknowledgments

We want to acknowledge the contribution and efforts of Sophie Bair, Arielle Baldwin, Monifa Bandele, Irene Berman-Vaporis, Stacey Ferguson, Katherine Gallagher Robbins, Anwasha Majumder, Sapna Mehta, and Hope Rohrbach for making updates to the third edition of this guide. Earlier editions would not have been possible without the contributions of Jae Aron, Rebecca Goldman, Amanda Harrington, Angie Jean-Marie, Michelle Jones Simms, Devan King, Jen Klein, Emily Koh, Rashema Melson, Lauren Powell, Christena J. Pyle, and Tina Tchen.

About TIME'S UP Foundation

The TIME'S UP™ Foundation insists upon safe, fair, and dignified work for all by changing culture, companies, and laws. We enable more people to seek justice through the TIME'S UP Legal Defense Fund™. We pioneer innovative research driving toward solutions to address systemic inequality and injustice in the workplace through the TIME'S UP Impact Lab. And we reshape key industries from within so they serve as a model for all industries.

The TIME'S UP Foundation is a 501(c)(3) charitable organization. All donations are tax deductible.

© 2021 TIME'S UP™ Foundation.
The TIME'S UP trademark is the protected property of TIME'S UP Now.

www.timesupfoundation.org